To Whom it May Concern,

In this day and age of 'thinking green' plus rising gas prices I believe that adding a bike/pedestrian lane as an option to improve the TappanZee crossing would be a vital and cost-effective . Prior to living in this area

I commuted nearly 6,000 miles from Brooklyn to Manhattan, 15 miles round trip daily and figure I saved countless dollars as well as improving my health. Each day over the Brooklyn Bridge, I appreciated that there was bicycle and pedestrian access available, and the only thing I lament about my move to this area is the lack of that with the TZ Bridge.

I can imagine many would take advantage of the option in thier daily commute, biking across the bridge to Tarrytown, locking up, and taking the train, and vice-versa.

Thank you,

best,
