With all we know now about Global Warming, our failed Energy Policy, our addition to the diminishing resource of Oil...it must be obvious that the new Tappan Zee Bridge must include the most robust mass transit solution available.

In my opinion, that would mean a direct rail link from Rockland, over the bridge to connect up with Metro North - directly into Grand Central. This could be the first step in a truly regional rail transport system.

20 years from now, as transportation fuel for our cars becomes scarce, this action on mass transit for the new bridge will be seen as a great and beneficial decision for our region and this country.

Be bold!
