Given the increased awareness of the severe environmental crisis we face it is imperative not to increase transportation facilities with their concomitant pollution, congestion, and depletion of fuel resources. Bigger bridges and roads are proven to increase traffic, pollution, and depletion of oil supplies. New York City has it right with the proposition of congestion fees and discouraging fossil fuel transportation.

Other more favorable ideas are severe tolls for single passenger driving, lower tolls for multi passenger vehicles as well as repairing the current bridge. Also, increased ferry use, a rail line in Rockland County, and increased ferry use would pave the way to a cleaner Hudson River corridor.
